How do you interpret a surgical procedure if you’re not an intern? How do you interpret classic literature if you weren’t an English major? How do you interpret computer lingo if you can’t even set the microwave clock? This workshop by Crom Saunders will help participants develop general tools for dealing with specialized vocabulary, and to broaden the use of their already developed skills to turn jargon into understandable and sign-able concepts. Crom Saunders currently teaches at the ITP program featured at Columbia College in Chicago, Illinois. He is very passionate about his performing and has interpreted dozens of plays, from children’s theatre to musicals and has taught dozens of ASL linguistics and theatrical workshops across the nation.
